

Behind the dark curtains of power that govern our world, lies an equally capable set of individuals protecting sacred truths and maintaining hope. Truths that define the heavens and the mysteries of the cosmos. Hope that humanity will appreciate and understand these truths. Hope that one day, all living beings may live happy and free with leaders that may one day unite both spiritual truths with authentic power. Two monarchs who had great potential in rising to such occasions were John Plantagenet and Isabella Taillefer. This is their untold story. Both monarchs had several loyal men and women surrounding them who believed in their sacred purpose.

Isabella took comfort in her mother-in-law's, Eleanor Plantagenet's advice. "A queen cannot claim her kingdom without her army." This army was a mixture of unlikely fellows, each gifted with their own set of skills. Every man, every woman, was strong in their sense of justice, valued honesty, and had compassion for the wounded. These souls fought, bled, and calculated every move with precision.

Out of pure love, Aymer Taillefer taught his daughter, Isabella, the art of geomatria sacre, the use of sacred shapes, and prayer to invoke protection, inspiration, and alignment with the Divine Cosmos. Aymer practiced and studied the mystical sciences. Both of her parents were silent heretics. They tolerated religious traditions to maintain their positions. In their hearts, they secretly delved into the depths of spiritual exploration the church declared forbidden.
